High school gave me my first lesson in bureaucracy. Rules were meant to be rigidly applied, not questioned. Power was meant to be feared and obeyed by functionaries. I don’t regret the experience. We learned very early that the only good things were the things that were doled out by functionaries. We were encouraged to study and learn, and never to question the wisdom of the authorities.

I regret, greatly, the formation of the New World University. I was never as much as suspended before. I was not too sure if the suspension was a true suspension, or a suspension in order to ease the burden of the school. If I could have a free and open school, the students would have been the ones to decide what was right and wrong. It would have been a true suspension, without any rosy-colored glasses. I believe that the students should have been allowed to decide what was right and wrong.

I regret my father, or any of my teachers, could have contributed to the worth of the school. I am not too sure if I was suspended or not. I was suspended for a week, or two, and then allowed back. I was not too sure if the suspension was a true suspension, or a suspension to ease the burden of the school. If I could have a free and open school, the students would have been the ones to decide what was right and wrong. I believe that the students should have been allowed to decide what was right and wrong.

I regret that many of my teachers wanted to control the worth of the school. I am not too sure if I was suspended or not. I was suspended for a week, or two, and then allowed back.
